

Passover

Crossing the red sea

Parables

Parables are stored in a box with a lid – “hidden” inside their box, the way their second meaning is hidden inside the parable.

Parable boxes are painted gold because of how precious the story is

Labourers in the vineyard

Parable figures are flat because they are meant to be two-dimensional: they are a story about a story.

- This year, we will tell parables using the felt-board and flat felt figures

Labourers in the vineyard

Parable figures are flat because they are meant to be two-dimensional: they are a story about a story.

- This year, we will tell parables using the felt-board and flat felt figures

Two Sons

Parable figures are flat because they are meant to be two-dimensional: they are a story about a story.

- This year, we will tell parables using the felt-board and flat felt figures

The Talents

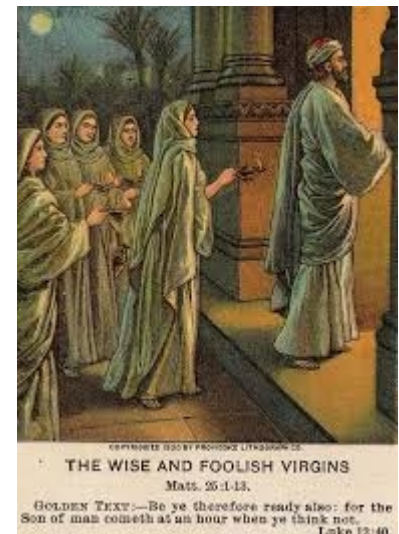

Parable figures are flat because they are meant to be two-dimensional: they are a story about a story.

-
- This year, we will tell parables using the felt-board

The bridesmaids

Parable figures are flat because they are meant to be two-dimensional: they are a story about a story.

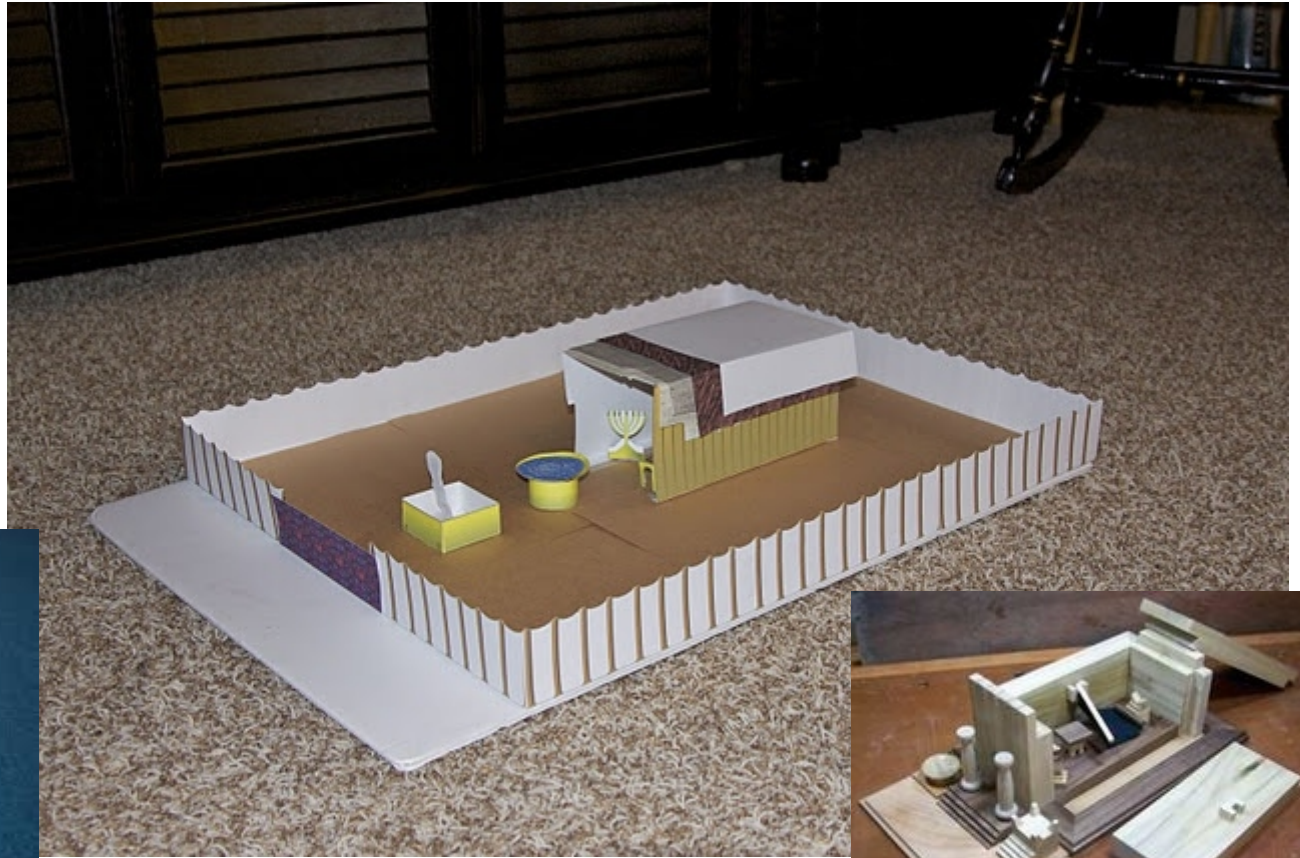

- This year, we will tell parables using the felt-board

The Law

Tabernacle

The Tabernacle follows the descriptions given in Torah, with one side removable so that children can see inside

Circle of the Church Year

The removable coloured blocks illustrate the seasons of the church year.

The calendar can be set up with varying numbers of Sundays in Epiphany and in Pentecost, to reflect the current year and the timing of Easter